The Humbug of Proverbs.

A Proverb has been defined as "the wisdom of many and the wit of one." Into many proverbs are packed pithy suggestions as to conduct and generalized experiences of mankind. They are sareastic, hortative, minatory, mirth-provoking, but they are not wiser than the people who make them. Hence, many of them, some of the most widely cur ent, are arrant humbugs, asserts the New York Examiner. If they were once true to experience, under certain conditions, they are true no longer. To say this is flat contradiction of the well-known proverb, "Nobody is wiser than everybody." But even that is one of the humbugs. It not infrequently happens that a single man is wiser than his whole generation. Such men become first the leaders, then the martyrs, of their age, but are the saints and heroes of the ages which follow.

As a flagrant instance of proverbial inwisdom and humbug, take the distich which has been dinned into the ears of unnumbered generation of children: "Early to bed, and early to rise, Makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise."

This is a terse and witty generalization of the experience of a pastoral community, where to get on in the world it is necessary to work in the fields from sun-up to sun-down. It has no application whatever to town life. The wealthy and wise men of town are men who work late and rise late, and as to our population so suffers from all manner of diseases as farmers and their families. Yet how many have been deprived of their natural sleep by a superstition, begot of this wretched thyme, that early rising is conducive to health. It is only in recent years that people have had the sleep which nanre demands. A man who did so a generation ago was called "lazy"-the most intolerable of all epithets, Franknow an old lady who takes pride in lin even aimed a proverb at him: "Men ling her grandchildren how, after the need five hours sleep, women six, children and fools seven." Now-a-days the man who takes less than eight is a Take some of the maxims inculcating shrewd business policy. "A penny sayed is a penny earned," has ruined many a man who could not persuade himself to spend money with judicious lavishness in ealarging his business. The penny saved was so large in his eyes that it has hid the dollar lost by his foolish economy. "Out of debt, out of danger," and better go to bed supperless than rise in debt," are a pecious pair which have brought many to the poorbouse. Debt is the only salvation of many a man Not debt recklessly incurred by extravagant living beyond his mea s, but debt incurred in the purchasing of a home or establishing of business.' White corn is onsidered as coming nearer to cats than vellow corn, and is therefore better food or working animals. So far as the results of analysis are known white corn has about 1 per cent. more of the muscleforming elements than yellow corn, but the relative value of the two varieties in this respect has not been accurately de-

Baffled the Doctors.

Probably the most remarkable case in he history of the medical profession of this or any other country was that of Lela Compton, the fourteen-year-old daughter of J. F. Compton, a farmer who lives fifteen miles northeast of this city, just in the edge of Spartanburg County. The story is one of the strangest ever heard or read of and is vouched for by twelve hysicians and hundreds of people of his and Spartanburg County. It is old for the first time by the News, and is lirect from Mr. Compton and his little laughter, who is now apparently as healthy as any child. They were both in the city yesterday. A News reporter had heard of the strange case many months ugo but refrained from mentioning it until he saw the father and his daughter.

On the second Monday in May of last year Lela Compton was taken ill. She didn't want to eat anything, but for a week her parents tried to restore her without sending for a physician. She did not grow any better and Mr. Compton sent for his family physician, Dr. White He said that the little girl had fever and prescribed remedies, among them calomel. The calomel made her intensely sick and instead of improving she grew rapidly worse. Two more physicians of the same neighborhood were called in. Each had a different idea of the disease from which she was suffering attd each would have prescribed different mediines. Nothing appeared to do the patient any good and she began to sob like a chastised child. This continued through the day, but at night would nearly cease and she would sleep soundly until morning. She began to complain of pains in health, it is notorious that no part of the breast and stomach and her head began to jerk convulsively.

The physicians finally decided that here was no hope for the child. Other physicians were called in, among them Dr. J. R. Wilkinson, of this city. All of hem decided that the girl could not live. The medicine and food which was given her was not retained. By this time the girl declined to take any more food or medicine, saying that medicine would not penefit her. She was a member of the Church and said nothing but prayer would help her.

Something over a month after she was taken ill she complained of the light hurting her eyes and it was not long before she lost her sight. For a while she could see objects but everything appeared black to her. Then she began to lose the power of speech. Two months after physician had been called in all that her stomach would retain was the juice of watermelon and the water that melted from ice put in her mouth. For five months she did not swallow a drink of water. Her father bought ice by the hundreds of pounds in this city. He did not give up hope and spent everything that he had saved and what he could borrow. The neighbors were kind and assisted him. The death of the child was expected every day and every hour. She had lain in bed ninety-four days without touching a morsel of food and for months without being able to speak or see. Her sense of hearing remained and by signs her parents understood when she wanted ice or watermelon juice. The physicians had attempted to keep up'life by injecting French brandy and cod liver oil. the father, who was at work, was sent for.

One day after the girl had been ill five nonths, breath seemed to leave her, and The sad preparations for burial were begun. Nos a muscle of the child moved, and there was not the least sign of life. She had been sick so long that her eyes had sunk deep in her head, sores covered her body and she did not weigh over twenty pounds. The neighbors came in to express their sympathy for the afflicted family and offer their assistance. The girl remained in the trance, for such it was, for two hours. She heard the lamenfeel that he was doing the State a service. He is not a loud-mouthed, blow-tations of her parents, the words of sympathy of friends, but she couldn't speak or nove. Suddenly life seemed to return to her and for the first time in months she feebly muttered that she was hungry. The father heard the mutterings. He was rejoiced and asked his child what she wanted. She said she wanted some fish and wanted everybody to pray for her. Mr. Compton did not wait to get the advice of a physician about giving the patient fish, but hurried to the Enorce river. He met a negro, who gave him part of an eel which he had caught. Mr. Compton returned, had the fish prepared and gave it to his daughter. She sucked the juice from it and swallowed small bits of the flesh. Strange to say, site retained this food. The little girl began slowly to grow better and asked for and was given what she wanted. The physicians still said she would not live. The father gave his daughter everything she asked for. As the power of speech returned the girl's sight grew better. The ower of opening her eyes, however, had left her, but the lids were pulled open and closed by her parents. They remained in wiatever position they were placed. Weeks passed and the little girl continued to strengthen. Her sight and the power of opening and closing the eye lids returned, and for two months she has been in good health, but is still weak.

Often before she became speechless she said that she felt something in her throat like a worm and tried to reach her fingers to it to pull it out. Her constant request was that she be prayed for and she believes now that prayer and a merciful God restored her to health. She is a pretty little girl, apparently not over eight or nine years old, and answered intelligently and pleasantly all questions asked her by the reporter. Money was left for her while she was ill and her father brought her to the city was promised the people in the campaign yesterday to let her purchase what she wanted, and she bought a handsome bu-

Storing Oranges in the Caves.

A very interesting discovery has been made by Mr. J. C. Briggs, of Russellville, Ky., which, if experience verifies, will revolutionize the orange trade of Florida, and give it a much more assured value. The problem which confronts the orange grower is the season at which the fruit riens and must be marketed. If the supply over and above the winter demand could be saved until the warm summer months and fresh juicy oranges could then be placed upon the market there would be a ready demand which would take all that are offered. This is the very problem that Mr. Briggs claims to have solved. He stated at the meeting of orange growers in Jacksonville the other day that he had been informed that in order to keep oranges a long while it is necessary to store them where the air is cool and dry. It occurred to him that these are the characteristic qualities of the air found in the caves of Kentucky. In the Mammoth Cave, for example, the temperature is about 52 degrees the year round, and the air is so dry that the remnants of the old wooden nitre vats seems to be almost imperishable. Acting on this suggestion he had placed a quantity of oranges and lemons in two caves, one of which has a temperature of 49 degrees. and is large enough to hold several million boxes of oranges. In these caves he has kept oranges in perfect condition for sixteen months and lemons for over a storage in his Kentucky caves to Florida orange growers, and enable them to market their crep at any season of the year they find most profitable. If more exended experiments verify those already made by Mr. Briggs the orange industry will take on new life, and the luscious fruit will be a perennial blessing instead of a winter luxury .- Correspondence of Augusta Chronicle.
